Support for adult victims who are still in a relationship with the perpetrator

The 'Engage' Idva, children's caseworker and Engage Case Manager provide support centred in safeguarding and risk management, that engages with the family experiencing domestic abuse who wish to remain in their relationship; increasing awareness and safety of victims, accountability and responsibility of perpetrators, and ensures children are appropriately supported. People may have separated previously, or may separate in the future.

“The biggest difference has been the recognition that there are times where I do get angry and the ability to step outside and recognise that I'm in that angry shark music mode and [...] further anger in this mode of thinking will only exacerbate and inflame an already difficult situation. I'm still not perfect but it's something [I'm] a lot more conscious of and working on now. So in the past whereas I might have told the kids to stop crying like little girls now over the last couple of months I felt myself hugging them in that moment which is something I would never have done in the past. So being able to emotionally engage with the individuals slightly better than I would have done in the past for me is a massive step in the right direction”
